100 on Hill Hear CIA Deputy Director

Clinton — Robert Amory, deputy director of the Central Intelligence Agency, discussed the workings of the agency before an audience of about 100 last night in the Hamilton College chapel in a talk he termed "off the record."

Details of the talk could not be learned from college officials today.

The topic of Amory's talk was "The Role of Intelligence in National Policy."

Robert H. Hevenor, public relations director of the college, said that in general terms Amory described the organization of the country's intelligence network and told of the advisory role of Central Intelligence in forming national policy.

Hevenor said Armory also discussed briefly the U-2 incident and the case of the two State Department defectors.
